

One Story and Attic Cottage.

Handsome Little Home With All Accommodations.
Cost $2,000.

PERSPECTIVE VIEW.

FIRST FLOOR PLAN.

This design presents a typical American home for an attractive one story and attic cottage. The extreme width is forty-one feet by sixty-one feet in depth over all. Note the circular piazza, fine for summer recreation. All accommodations have been sought for in this commodious home, as chamber and bathroom besides living rooms are on one floor. The pretty bay windows make living rooms very enjoyable. The interior finish is all to be hard wood except kitchen, bedroom and bathroom, which are intended to be finished in pine and cypress. Dining room and sitting room each have an artistic colonial fireplace. The attic floor is sufficiently large for three additional chambers, and height of such could be 8 feet 6 inches, with slight rafter finish in rooms. First story is to have a ten foot story height, and basement is intended under entire house seven feet in depth. From rear porch refrigerator closet has been provided. A good sized vestibule has also been designed at front entrance, as well as separate entrance from dining room to piazza. The first story walls are intended to be clapboarded and second story cemented, which gives this design a most beautiful exterior effect and on the old English timber style of architecture. Color of painting should be body cream, with white trim and white sash for first and slate color cement and casings white for second story. Estimated cost, with full plumbing, mantels and grates, exclusive of heating, $2,000.

NEW YORK'S DEMAND

To Enlarge Boundaries to Meet
Remarkable Growth

CITY TO REACH 5,000,000

Hetty Green Bank Declines Government Deposits—Celebrated Case of Brian Born—New Art Swindle Uses Uncle Sam as Accomplice.

NEW YORK, June 26.—Now it is proposed to change Greater New York into Greatest New York by a further extension of the city's limits. In the ten years since the organization of the greater city its population has grown so rapidly that it has overflowed the limits then created. Much of this increase has gone into New Jersey and has built up an almost solid urban community in the northeastern part of that state, extending for a distance of from fifteen to twenty miles from the Manhattan shores. These cities have a population of a million and a quarter or more and commercially form a part for Greater New York although territorially of course they cannot be added to it on account of the conflict of state boundaries. To the northward, however, there is no such difficulty as this and this is the direction in which the city has been growing most rapidly. Ten years ago when the city was enlarged to its present boundaries the northern part which forms Bronx Borough had a population of only 100,000 and contained great stretches of undeveloped land. This has been built up very rapidly and now has more than 300,000 inhabitants. Adjoining New York northern line the cities of Yonkers, Mount Vernon, and New Rochelle have been growing at a tremendous rate and it is now proposed to include these and the intervening sections of Westchester county in the city, adding a quarter of a million to its population and bringing the total up to more than 4,000,000 with a prospect of reaching the 5,000,000 mark by 1910. The subject is being agitated particularly by representatives of Bronx Borough who declare that the Brooklyn and Queens section of the city are favored in public improvements at their expense. Consequently they want to add to their voting strength on the city boards by the creation of a new borough. This addition, if made, would increase the area of the greater city to nearly 400 square miles but would leave it still only three-fifths the size of metropolitan London. While there are many people who hold that New York is already so large as to be an unwieldy municipality it seems to be inevitable that its limits will soon be extended to take in a considerable addition of territory up the Hudson and along Long Island Sound.

One effect of the currency law passed at the recent session of Congress has been to make one of the strongest banks in the country decline government deposits and return those that it has on hand. This is the famous Chemical Bank of this city. The reason for this action is not hostility to the new law the fact that it requires banks to pay interest on government deposits. The Chemical pays no interest to depositors and it argued that to make an exception of Uncle Sam would be an unfair discrimination against its other customers. The Chemical Bank is one of New York's institutions in the same sense as the Brooklyn Bridge or Central Park and its atmosphere in spite of the new building which it recently erected, is much more like that of an old world established than like the typical hustling American banking house. It will not accept deposits indiscriminately and to induce it to take on a new depositor is like obtaining membership in one of the city's exclusive clubs. The sole concession it has ever been known to make is to furnish desk room to its star depositors, Hetty Green, who is reputed to carry the largest cash balance of any bank depositor in the country, running up to four or five millions, and who makes her headquarters at the bank, thereby saving office rent.

The case of Brian Born threatens to become historic in the legal annals of the country. The Brian Born referred to is not the celebrated Irish hero but a terrier of the same nationality belonging to Borough President Bird S. Coler of Brooklyn who was formerly Comptroller of New York, and later the Democratic candidate for Governor. In an evil moment Brian Born wandered from home and fell into the hands of one of the dog-catchers employed by the S. P. C. A. Mr. Coler, whose actions do not belie his peculiar first name, hastened to the rescue of his pet only to be informed that he must pay a fine of $3 and a tax of $2 or else see the redoubtable Brian go the way of many another less highly pedigreed canine into the gas tank. Mr. Coler who loves a fight as well as his terrier does had no other battle on his hands at the moment. He did not so much mind parting with five dollars of his hard-earned salary inasmuch as he is a man of considerable wealth, but he immediately decided that it was unconstitutional for the state to delegate police powers to a private organization such as the "cruelty society." He thereupon became the champion of oppressed dogdom and set out to obtain a legal decision as to the constitutional rights of dogs and their owners. The case has got as far as the Supreme Court of the state but it is likely to be carried through higher tribunals to the Supreme Court in Washington. Meanwhile the fate of Brian Born hangs in the balance. If he finally goes the chloroform path he will have the questionable satisfaction of knowing that his name figures in voluminous court reports and may be cited in precedents centuries hence.

New York is again excited over the dwindling of its export grain trade. The cause of the latest agitation is the withdrawal of five of the great freighters of the White Star Line. The commercial interests realize that it is inevitable that much of the grain which formerly passed through this port on its way to Europe will continue to take its course marketward via Gulf ports on account of the advantage in location which the latter enjoy. What arouses ire in connection with the present incident is the fact that the grain diverted from this shipping point is going out through Montreal and that some of the steamers withdrawn from here may be put on the Montreal service. The railroad differentials which make grain cost two-and-a-half cents a bushel more in New York than at the Canadian port are blamed for this situation. In view of the fact that the question was fought out before the Interstate Commerce Commission two or three years ago and resulted in a decision adverse to New York and Boston it is doubtful if anything can be done, but an attempt probably will be made to secure some concession from the railroads.

It isn't often that importers over-value the articles that they bring into the country from abroad and on which they pay customs duties. In fact the vigilance of inspectors is devoted wholly to preventing undervaluation. A practice has been brought to light this week, however, in which certain importations are deliberately inventoried at a figure far above their real value in spite of the additional duty passed. This is in the importation of foreign pictures and is a new phase of the bogus art scandal in which Uncle Sam is involved as an innocent accomplice. The importer of an alleged "old master" which cost as much as fifty or seventy-five dollars when purchased of some unknown European artist has the invoice made out to show a valuation of $3,000 or $5,000 or whatever figure he may select. He pays a duty of twenty per cent, on this estimate and then shows his receipt to the unsuspecting customer whose bank account is larger than his knowledge of art. Such a proof of worth is accepted as conclusive and the dealer has no difficulty in making four hundred per cent. profit on his small investment plus as much as he can induce his victim to pay. The game is said to have been worked successfully on a number of guileless millionaires who flatter themselves that they are familiar with most forms of sharp dealing.

AS THINGS ARE.

It was evening in the great West. The golden sun had gone over the cornfields, and all was silent.

"Maria, what did you do with that Rubens that came to-day?"

"I hung it up in the art gallery, next to the Rembrandt."

"That's right. How about that new balloon we ordered?"

"We got a wireless to-day from the factory, saying it wouldn't be ready until next week."

"Um! That will give one of them chauffeurs of ours an excuse to be idle. Couldn't get any of them chaps to help with the hay. How is the new French car acting?"

"Fine. But I had to telephone for a new set of tires."

"Did that consignment of government bonds come?"

"Yes."

"And how about that first folio edition of Shakespeare?"

"That's here."

And then the Kansas farmer, removing his evening clothes and putting on his overalls, went out on the estate and locked up for the night.—Success Magazine.

MRS. STANFORD'S JEWELS.

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, June 27.—The Stanford University trustees announced at the close of their meeting that a complete sale of the jewels of Mrs. Jane Stanford amounted to $500,000. This sum will be invested in 5 per cent bonds and the interest will be used to purchase books for the University library.

Born in Iowa.

Our family were all born and raised in Iowa, and have used Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera, and Diarrhoea Remedy made at Des Moines for years. We know how good it is from long experience in the use of it. In fact, when in El Paso, Texas, the writer's life was saved by the prompt use of this remedy. We are now engaged in the mercantile business at Narcossee, Ia., and have introduced the remedy here. It has proven very successful and is constantly growing in favor.—Ennis Bros. This remedy is for sale by Frank Hart and leading druggists.
